length. Mr. Aylsworth said he felt that he could conscientiously support the motion. He thought it a special case, and the county would be justified in coming to the assistance of those who were endeavoring to get this railway located near Tweed, especially as it was now impossible for them according to the existing law, to secure the passing of a bonus, but would have to bear the expense of securing a right of way themselves. Mr. Anderson doubted if the multiplication of railways in the county lightened this traffic on gravel roads. The expense for repair of these roads were growing each year.

Saturday afternoon a young man named Ellis, employed on the Grand Junction brakeless, lost his life at Campbelloff. Coming close to Campbelloff he put on the brakes, but the train was very tight, and he tried to let it roll by the bridge, and when it did not he tried to stop. Turning around he kicked at the cog to loosen it, but his foot slipped, perhaps through missing his aim, and he fell over his right shoulder, severing his arm over his right shoulder, severing his arm over his right shoulder and his arm from his body. He lived about five hours. The remains were taken to Louisville, where he resided. His father, George, was a well known steamshipper and an old resident of Belleville, at present in England on business. Mr. Ellis has lost his wife and daughter with the exception of one son, now in college, during his absence. He is nearly seventy years of age. Mr. Ellis leaves a wife and a married life of little over a year. He had no children.

On Saturday, 17th, Mr. H. Smith, residing Faraday, about three miles southeast of Bancroft, went out at 4 o'clock p. m. to hunt for his cows in the woods, and in the morning, his wife and family became alarmed at his absence, and Mrs. Smith started to Mr. J. Vaskilek's, where nearly 150 whole settlers were assembled, at a meeting called to discuss the news the meeting at once broke up, and the men started to hunt for Mr. Smith, and searched the woods for a long distance around until dark, but without success.

At 12 o'clock the nightingales commenced their tender and lightening conversation accompanied by torrents of rain, which lasted till midnight, and as Mr. Smith upward of sixty years of age, and in the course of his life had been afflicted with a number of ailments, the most serious of which was a broken heart, and is also subject to heart disease, his chances of pulling through were all against him. Next morning, the news having spread, large numbers of volunteers gathered at the residence of the man, and he was actively kept up till 3 p. m. when he was at last found by Mr. A. Johnson, of Bancroft, who is certainly about the best wood-ranger in the back country. Johnson tried to get him to go to the hospital, but he refused, saying that he was coming and last Sunday. Fortunately, he did not lose his presence of mind, and seeing the storm of Sunday approaching, he found a great pile of fallen trees and brush, and he cut up all night long. On Monday he was exhausted with work and fatigue, and did not move very far. It is probable he made a wide circuit in

The Summer Fallow.

The summer, or bare fallow, was formerly considered the best method of preparing the soil for the wheat crop. The exposure of the soil to atmospheric air, the influence of frost for a whole season has an excellent effect, but it is not necessary. A crop may be grown; and if rightly attended to, the succeeding grain crop may be as good as when preceded by a season of fallow. The good results of fallow are the most evident upon clay land. The heavy, close texture of the soil is improved by the frequent stirring and stirring, thus opening the soil for the free entrance of the air, and the better cir-ulation of the soil-water. These mechanical improvements facilitate the decomposition of some of the constituents of the soil. The peat and other essential elements of the soil are not washed out, but are assimilated chemically with the compounds of the soil. The peat, which is a very rich source of the chemical elements, is made ready for absorption, and, last but not least, is brought to the surface of the soil, where it is thoroughly decomposed, and thereby made available for sustaining the growing plants. A Terrible Deed.

Philips Alexia, who died in Lania the other day at the great age of 94, had in his youth wryllingly contributed to one of the deeds perpetrated by the employed to crush the Gre

bellion 1821. He was playing his trade as a master carpenter, in his native town, when he was elected to the office of mayor of Smyrna, after his victory over the insurgents at Thermopylae, where he had taken several hundred prisoners. He was then elected to the throne of the celebrated champion of Hellenic liberties, Athanasios Dikeyos. The fierce Moslems, who were infuriated by the Greek independence, spilt on a wooden stake and roasted alive; and Alexis was required, on pain of death, to furnish the Moslems with a large and barbarous sentence with all the implements necessary for its fulfillment; that is to say, a spit of iron, a large wooden wheel, a millstone, and two stout wooden trestles, provided with a large iron screw, and a large extremity of the stake might have free play during the wicked patriot's martyrdom. The executioner, however, who had already completed the task imposed upon him, the Pasla's inhuman decree was carried out.

Three slices of bread shown by a Lewiston flour dealer Thursday, spoke for themselves. Placed aside by side they were distinctly different. The first was the white of graham and fell to your hand like a half-baked brick. Another was nearly white, and would be greeted with pleasure by a hungry man. The third was so white that snowmen made. The first was bleached with lye; the second with soda; the third was bleached with starch. It is moreover, was asserted that sporey texture which is so gratifying to the eater and a source of so much pride to the cook. It threatened to dissolve in one's mouth, and would tempt to gorgeous epicure. It would not be a bit like any one could distinguish. beated. It is much wiser to drink largely of ice thirst than to drink. The fluid greatly increases perspiration, thus the blood weakens the system and induces constant thirst. Cool water poured on the wrists or held upon the temples reduces the temperature of the blood, and is refreshing without being injurious. The head needs special protection. A straw hat, not black, is the great comfort, and if some green leaves—calceolae are excellent—are put in the crown there is less danger from the heat. A handkerchief fastened to the hat and falling over the shoulders will keep the bright, burning sun's rays from the neck. This latter precaution is very necessary for those who are Spanish Parliamentary Oath.

A committee of the Congress, presided over by the eminent poet, Nemesio de Arce, has made a report proposing the abolition of parliamentary oaths to be replaced by a promise to abstain from violence. The proposal is elastic enough to admit Free Thinkers and all religious creeds, but still attracting all religious creeds. Most of the Liberals and Democrats, will oppose the proposal. The radicals and the malcontents of the right, however, will support the proposal. It is to be hoped that he would undertake to inaugurate an administration if King Alfonso were to abdicate. He is as liberal as to let him frame a program of Democrats like to get the support even of Democrats like Maroto.

A GRAND AND GRATIFYING SUCCESS.

Thursday of last week, 6th inst., the day appointed for the opening of the new church, was a day of great interest.

The church, which is a fine specimen of modern architecture, was opened by the Rev. Dr. St. John.

The service was a most interesting and profitable one, and the church was filled to capacity.

The Rev. Dr. St. John, in his address, spoke of the importance of the church as a place of worship.

He said that the church was a place where the people could find comfort and solace.

He also spoke of the importance of the church as a place of instruction.

He said that the church was a place where the people could learn the truth and live by it.

He concluded his address by saying that the church was a place where the people could find life and happiness.
